1. Lienyun (119-30, 34-41) is on a hill called Yant'ai-shan (雲台山) about 700 feet above sea level. Defenses consist of air raid shelters, communication trenches, and artillery gun emplacements.
2. Communication trenches, one to two meters deep and one meter wide, are along the banks of the Ch'ao (潮) and Shu (119-30, 34-41) Rivers, which run from east to west, and the I (118-30, 34-41) River, which runs from north to south. Pillboxes, machine gun and artillery gun emplacements, and anti-tank obstacles are along these trenches.
3. There are three lines of trenches:
 - a. From Hsiao'ou (119-15, 34-36) through Hsin'ou (119-14, 34-37) to Yenwei (119-50, 34-39) Harbor.
 - b. From T'anch'eng (118-35, 34-39) in Shantung through Hsin'ou (119-14, 34-37) to Shuyang; (118-31, 34-38).
 - c. From Lichichuang (118-30, 34-36) between T'anch'eng and Lini (118-34, 34-37) to Hsueh'ien (119-10, 34-38).
4. Troops deployed at Lienyun and neighborhood are from the 96 Army of the 3rd Field Army.² Army headquarters are at Tungshan (119-12, 34-34) and units are deployed at Hsin'ou, Hsiao'ou, Hsueh'ien, Hsueh'ien (119-18, 34-38) and Yenwei Harbor. Sometimes men are posted at Hsueh'ien (119-10, 34-38), Hsin'ou, and Shuyang. Although garrison units at Lienyun are frequently changed, the total strength is never less than an army.
5. Gunboats and landing craft and the chief naval craft in Lienyun Harbor waters, and submarines are often seen there. The sea area between Lienyun, Tsingtao, and Shanghai has been mined under a permit of the Soviets. An observation post on Hsiao'ou (119-15, 34-36) Island has radar, search lights, and a battery of guns. One squadron is permanently stationed at the air base at Hsueh'ien (117-10, 34-38).
